

Booker T. Washington - Rosenwald Schools

Lesson Plan

Overview:

This lesson covers historical information about Booker T. Washington and the Rosenwald schools that were developed between 1912 and 1932. While Washington had the vision, philanthropist Julius Rosenwald provided financial resources, which, along with matching community contributions, built thousands of schools for Black children in the rural south. The Rosenwald schools successfully educated two generations of children and made significant progress in closing the educational gap between rural blacks and whites.

This is an appropriate lesson for Black History Month, studies on civil rights, visionary design, social movements in education, civic ideals and practices, and social-emotional development.

Lesson Prompt:

Share the prepared PowerPoint presentation on the Rosenwald Schools. The presentation includes discussion prompts to reinforce the principles discussed.
