

Marcus Garvey, Part 2: Black Star Falling

Teacher's Guide

The Woodson Center's lesson on the life and work of Marcus Garvey after 1920 affords the educator a great deal of flexibility in its implementation. The resources featured may be used to implement a lesson that is appropriate for a full or partial class session. Students will:

- Explore Garvey's life, ideas, and work through primary and secondary source documents
- Analyze and discuss essential questions
- Reflect on the lesson through persuasive writing prompts, multiple choice questions, as well as collaborative project extension activities

Learning Objectives

At the end of this lesson, students will be able to describe the:

- Social, political, and economic forces that shaped Marcus Garvey and the U.N.I.A.;
- Motives and actions of Garvey's critics in the civil rights movement;
- Efforts of the U.S. government to prosecute, imprison, and deport Garvey;
- Foundations, purpose, and structure of the United Negro Improvement Association;
- Motivations for opposition to Garvey from other Black leaders and law enforcement;
- Importance of Harlem, New York City, as a center for Black American arts and culture;
- Influence of Garvey's Pan-Africanist ideas in the wider African diaspora, and in Africa itself.

The materials in this lesson can be cut down and rearranged to suit classroom conditions, timeframe, student comfort level, or to connect with other material from an established syllabus or textbook. Along with the Marcus Garvey, Part 1: Black Star Rising, the 2001 documentary Marcus Garvey: Look for Me in the Whirlwind and accompanying resources provided by PBS and its American Experience series offer a comprehensive picture of Garvey's life and thought.

Negro with a Hat by Colin Grant (2008) is one of the key sources for this lesson; Black Moses by E. David Cronon (1960) and Marcus Garvey: Life and Lessons (1987), edited by Robert Hill and Barbara Blair, are also useful biographies for more advanced students and in-depth projects.

Students will be able to define the following vocabulary words, drawn from the Slide Deck, Case Studies, and Documents-Based Questions:

acrimony	bombastic	barrage	dissension	expatriate	foibles	hubris
mountebank	rheumatism	surreal	tumultuous	vitriolic	yoke	zeitgeist

Full Class Session Instruction (1-2 class days, approximately 50 – 75 minutes per day):

1. A “bell ringer” or lesson hook is always a great way to stimulate student thinking and introduce a topic for the day's lesson. Suggested bell ringers to ask students:
  - “Who was Marcus Garvey? What do you already know about him?”
  - “Why do movements succeed or failure? What makes or breaks an organization?”

- “How did the American and European governments view Garvey’s ideas and publications?”
2. The teacher should have the bell ringer displayed on the board and allow the students a few minutes to independently think about it. Next, students may turn to a peer next to them to discuss their thoughts on the opening prompt. Finally, the teacher may ask for any students to volunteer to share their thoughts with the entire class.
  3. Before moving into this second part Garvey lesson, ensure that students are familiar (in some way) with part one and the wider context for early 20th century America: efforts by the U.S. government to investigate and disrupt “radical” movements, the rise of groups like the NAACP, and growing nationalist sentiment throughout the colonial world. The Library of Congress exhibit on the “Progressive Era” provides brief overviews of important social transformations from 1900 – 1929, while “The Great Depression and World War II” covers the final decade of Garvey’s life.
  4. The teacher may want to take a few minutes to discuss the growth and development of Pan-Africanism in the Americas and the colonial world, the different leaders and factions of the early civil rights movement, and the increase in racial and political violence in the United States after World War I. (Related Woodson Center curriculum lessons on these topics are suggested below.)
  5. At this point, the teacher may open the Marcus Garvey, Part 1 Slide Deck and introduce students to the story of the decline and fall of Garvey and the U.N.I.A. in the 1920s and 30s.
  6. After reading the background story on Garvey’s controversial later life and the political and legal efforts to bring him down, the teacher may pause and ask students the following questions:
    - “Why did so many major leaders in the civil rights movement despise Garvey?”
    - “Who or what was ultimately responsible for Garvey’s imprisonment and deportation?”
    - “What kept the memory of Garvey and his work alive after his exile and death?”
  7. The next part of the lesson allows the teacher flexibility to group students together to read and to discuss the lesson Case Studies. Each group may be assigned a particular Case Study to read and then to complete the accompanying questions. If time allows, groups may read more than one Case Study. Students can be asked to develop a group statement about the Case Study to share with the class; the statement could articulate what struck them most about the story.
  8. At this point, the teacher may want to connect Garvey’s life and ideas to current events. Students can search for recent news articles or interviews about the continuing significance of the U.N.I.A. and its values, celebrations or memorials to Garvey in art and culture, or the campaign to persuade the U.S. government to grant Garvey a posthumous pardon.
  9. Lessons may conclude with an independent writing activity, e.g., a brief reflection on the controversies surrounding Garvey, or a small group discussion about the significance of his ideas in the years after World War II. Possible extensions of the lesson include answering Case Study questions, responses to the Documents Based Questions (DBQs) included as a supplement, and/or the creation of a digital trifold on Garvey’s legacy in the modern world.

Woodson Center Lessons

Marcus Garvey, Part 1: Black Star Rising: Strongly recommended (though not necessarily required) first installment of this lesson covers Garvey's life through 1920.

Paul Cuffe: Likely the wealthiest Black man in the early American republic, this mariner, merchant, and fervent abolitionist built the first Back-to-Africa movement with his own wealth.

54th Massachusetts: This lesson tells the true story of the all-Black Civil War regiment restored to public memory by the film Glory (1989). Many Black American veterans were also interested in renewing cultural and intellectual ties to Africa, and went on to postwar careers in politics.

Booker T. Washington and the Rosenwald Schools: Another story of cooperation to solve a problem, this time between the great education reformer Washington, who sought to bring education to Black children in the rural South, and the Chicago philanthropist Julius Rosenwald.

Tulsa: Terror and Triumph: In March of 1921, the Greenwood neighborhood of Tulsa, Oklahoma was one of wealthiest Black communities in America, famous for its "Black Wall Street" of Black-owned businesses and cultural attractions. But one night of racist violence destroyed it all. In the weeks and years that followed, the people of Greenwood came together and rebuilt their home.
